

Progress in the grandkids' herb garden

The Tidbit called "Kids' Corner" showed you the beginning stages of the herb garden my grandchildren and I started together. It's hard to believe it's grown as much as these photos show!

Sophia loves their herb garden almost as much as she loves having Grandma take her picture! The Russian sage behind her has lived up to its reputation as an exceptional plant.

Grandson Eric likes the lemon grass. The wonderful pink/purple flowers behind the lemon grass are echinacea, also known as purple coneflower, native to our prairies.

Miah is showing me that the dianthus is her favorite. Behind her are cheerful little yellow coreopsis, and a tall scented geranium.

My namesake granddaughter Sara says the garden is a wonderful place! The feathery foliage in the back is a summer tamarisk tree. It's almost time for us to do some harvest and clean up, and then we can start to plan for next year!
